FREFACE

The present study is in the field of agricultural economics, an applied science for the solution • f economic problems of agriculture. A em.11 part • f study deals with the • cemeaic mature • f Danish co-operative dairies and their development. The greater part of study deals mainly with some • cemenic problems arising within the field of Thai • griculture, milk production, and marketing • * milk and dairy products and the solution • f such problems by the application • f' the co-operative dairy system • f Denmark, where the author atudied economics far three years and four months.

One • f the primary purposes • f the present study is to prepare a scientific literature en a bedy of economic elements of the Danish co-pertire dairy to guide Thai government co-operative • fficials in solving the present problame • f the Thai dairy industry.

owing to lack • f pertinent scientific literature, this study is not at all breed solely em documentary research, but considerably upon direct • bservation and thr use of survey, personal interview, correspondence, and case study. As based on these techniques for collecting pertinent information • rfacts, the study is undeubtedly • rigimal. In spite • f the shortcomings of the study, the author hoper thur to contribute mere or less to the science. Moreover, the study may serve as a link between Thailand and Donmark in technical ce-operation on dairying.

The author wishes to acknowledge the deep gratitud. he eves t. the Dames, Thais, and Indians for their help and co-operation. Without the help • md ce-operation the study could not have been carried out t. success.

Bangkek, 1974

Thip Thipchaimetha