THE AILING LION

An old Lion, who was no longer quick enough to catch for himself the food he needed in his own way, sent out word that he was dying, and would appreciate a last gift from all his subjects. So one by one they came in sorrow to bid him a last goodbye to him, and by and by he ate them up. One day the Fox arrived to pay his respects, but being a cautious beast he stood in the doorway, and from there he asked after his Majesty's health. Ah! my dearest friend, said the Lion, Is it you at last? Won't you come to me and speak a word of comfort in your poor King's ear, who has so short a time to live? No, you, said the Fox, I would do so, except I fear your death is catching. For look at all the footsteps leading in, and not a single going out!

Don't trust the tyrant. He asks for pity.

He was a very silent man 1 custom. All day he hung around 2 cove, or upon the cliffs, with 3 brass telescope; all evening he sat 4 a corner of the parlor next 5 the fire, and drank rum and 6. Mostly he would not speak when 7 to; only look up suddenly with 8 fierce expression and blow through his 9 like a foghorn; and we and 10 people who came to our house 11 learned to leave him alone. Every 12, when he came back from his 13, he would ask if any seafaring 14 had gone by along the road 15 first we thought it was the 16 for company of his own kind 17 made him ask this question; but 18 but we began to see that 19 wished to avoid them. When a 20 arrived at our inn, he would 21 in at him through the curtained 22 before he entered the parlor; and 23 was always sure to be silent 24 a mouse when any such was 25.

NAPOLEON TO JOSEPHINE

I don't love you, not at 1 ; on the contrary, I detest you— 2 're a naughty, gawky, foolish Cinderella. You 3 write me; you don't love your 4 ; you know what pleasure your letters 5 him, and yet you haven't written 6 six lines, dashed off casually!

What 7 you do all day, Madam? What 8 the affair so important as to 9 you no time to write to 10 devoted lover? What affection stifles 11 puts to one side the love, 12 tender and constant love you promised 13 ? Of what sort can be that 14 being, that new lover who absorbs 15 moment, tyrannizes over your days, and 16 your giving any attention to your 17 ? Josephine, take care! Some fine night, 18 doors will be broken open, and 19 I'll be.

Indeed, I am very 20 , my love, at receiving no news 21 you; write me quickly four pages, 22 full of agreeable things which I 23 fill my heart with the pleasantest 24.

I hope before long to crush 25 in my arms and cover you 26 a million kisses burning as though 27 the equator.
